S Science

Cellulite is the name given to lumpy, irregular fat deposits often found around the hips, buttocks, and upper leg areas. It is sometimes described as “orange peel skin” because of the dimpled appearance of the affected areas. Nearly all women will develop noticeable cellulite at some point in their lives, even those who put a lot of effort into keeping their bodies slim and well toned. Cellulite occurs because large numbers of fat cells are located in pockets within the connective tissue of the skin. Over time, a buildup of fluids and fat can cause the external orange peel effect on the skin that we all dislike so much.

It is commonly believed that only overweight women have cellulite. The fact remains that almost all women will experience at least a modicum of cellulite in their lifetime. It is very difficult for the body to use these fat stores because there is very little blood flow so close to the surface of the skin. Common practices of cellulite treatment include increasing the surface blood flow to force the body to burn away these fat stores.
